Abstract

The systematic interdisciplinary investigations of the remarkable agglomeration of archaeological sites on the area of Sboryanovo in NE Bulgaria led to the discovery of the most important religious and political center of the Northern Thracians- the Getae, identified as Dausdava (“The City of the Wolves”) with the Hellenistic polis Helis situated in its center. Excavations of the Hellenistic necropolises contributed to the reconstruction of the specific burial rites of “immortalization” of the Getae, to the discovery of two royal Getic burials and of new data about the cultural and political relations of the Getae with their contemporary Celtic, North European and Mediterranean world.
